but not everyone in the industry is so supportive of the FDA using real ads to test risk comprehension.

For example, an automated iris scan could grant you entry through your front door, or a voice-recognition system could allow you to enable or disable preprogrammed settings.

especially if you are overweight to start with when really you need less, not more.